SGWU confirms merger with Loyola

Contrary to a report published in yesterday's Gazette, Loyola and Sir George Williams universities have not yet decided on the exact details of their proposed merger.

The universities decided to consider a merger when it became apparent that they would be unable to survive financially as separate institutions. Loyola has not been getting very generous grants from the government because it does not have a charter.

The university has never been granted a charter first, because as one university official informed the Daily, it has Jesuit roots, and teaching with religious overtones was at one time against government policy; second, it is an English-speaking university and the Quebec government has recently been promoting long-neglected French university education in the province.

27,500 students will be affected if the merger takes place. Nothing has been decided about the distribution of students between universities. But Loyola suggested in April that the universities retain their own faculties of Arts and Science, but form common faculties of Engineering and Commerce.

The government, however, is opposed to a federation in which the only link between the universities is financial, and so a more thorough amalgamation of academic and administrative structures seems probable.

Sir George's gains from the merger are not as immediately obvious as Loyola's. According to a spokesman, the merger will help Sir George "serve the community more effectively" and it will result in a second, stronger English-speaking university in Quebec.

A meeting is planned Thursday between officials from Sir George and the government concerning the proposed merger. Loyola has no intention of attending.

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS UNIVERSITY has confirmed that it will be merging with Loyola College sometime next year. According to a university official, the merger will create "a bigger, stronger English university".

Political deportation protested

The Committee for the Defence of the National Minority People's Rights met last night to protest the political deportation of former McGill student Subir Roy.

The Committee was formed to promote resistance to the policy of racial discrimination and political repression carried out by the Canadian Immigration department against the people of various national minorities in Canada and Québec.

The Immigration department's treatment of 24-year-old Subir Roy is a case in point.

Roy arrived in Canada with his parents from New Delhi, 18 years ago. He was not quite six years of age.

He attended school in Montreal and later studied at McGill. He speaks two languages — English and French.

While at McGill he became involved with various progressive political action groups, and first attracted the attention of immigration and police authorities.

After completing his studies at McGill, Roy travelled to Halifax where he found a job in a small progressive bookstore in the heart of the black ghetto.

It was there last November, at the height of the War Measures hysteria, that he was involved in an incident with former Halifax Mayor and notorious communist-baiter James Vaughan.

Vaughan, who had often expressed his desire to "clean out this nest of commies and foreign agitators", visited the bookstore one afternoon with a couple of friends, and began to taunt and provoke Roy with racial epithets.

A pushing match ensued and Roy was charged with common assault, and after a mock trial was sentenced to 20 days in the Halifax Correctional Institute.

After being released, Roy returned to Montreal, where on May 20 he was again arrested for participating in a peaceful demonstration to protest the U.S. presence in South East Asia, and sentenced to two months in jail.

While in jail he was visited by officers of the Department of Immigration and informed of their intention to deport him.

After nearly twenty years in Canada, where all his relatives now live, Roy has no place to go to in India.

In 1967 he became a landed immigrant, in November 1972 he would have become a Canadian citizen. The immigration authorities are doing their best to deport him before then.

Roy has appealed his case but the odds are against him as most appeals of this nature usually fall upon deaf ears.

Members of the Committee for the defense of the National Minority People's Rights emphasized that Roy's case is only one example of the inhuman policies of the Immigration Department.

They mentioned cases of Vietnamese students harassed by the authorities for their support of the National Liberation struggle in their own country, and Haitian patriots politically active in the fight to liberate their land who have been deported and delivered into the hands of the Duvalier regime.

The Committee is planning an active campaign to expose these discriminatory policies, and will begin by organizing a series of meetings and discussions at various campuses and schools across Montreal.

Council to seek fee increase

The Students' Society intends to ask students to approve a fee increase this year. In order to gain support for the increase, the Society plans to involve itself in activities which will benefit as large a number of students as possible.

Last year, financial troubles forced the Society to restrict the budgets of all clubs and activities and to cancel activities like Winter Carnival. A major blow to the Society's financial stability was the failure of a student co-op project which left the Society with a $50,000 debt to the University.

This year, complications arising from the sale of the property on which the co-op was to be built, will increase that debt to approximately $75,000. Arrangements for payment of the debt over the next few years are now being made.

Finance Director Peter Chodos outlined other problems faced by the Society this year. The investment fund is down by more than $150,000. Student enrolment is expected to drop by about 600 this year and this will result in a loss of revenue of approximately $15,000. Finally, the costs of maintaining the Student Union are increasing, mostly because of higher light and heat expenses. The Society also hopes to increase the wages of maintenance and secretarial staff.

According to Chodos, cutbacks this year will be shared uniformly by all campus organizations. The Society however will favour those clubs and societies whose programs involve a large part of the student body. If there is no fee increase, small national clubs will be the first to face cutbacks.

What funds the Students' Society does have will be spent on campus-wide activities, rather than small projects. René Sorell, Major Activities Director of the Society and a member of the Finance Committee, anticipates support from the Engineering Undergraduate Society, the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society as well as large ethnic clubs on these "mass-involvement programs". Sorell mentioned the possibility of a media floor, movies and a music listening room, in the Union. He has also suggested a speakers program in conjunction with the Debating Union.

Students will be asked to vote on the fee increase, probably some time before Christmas. In the meantime, the Students' Society will conduct an extensive, two-month program to justify a hike in fees.

Lortie waives defense

The kidnapping trial of Bernard Lortie continued yesterday with the accused making no effort to present a defense or call witnesses on his own behalf.

During the morning session, he was expelled from the courtroom for outbursts and there was some question as to whether he would be allowed to return for the afternoon session. However, he was readmitted to the defendants' dock when the trial resumed again at 3 pm.

Lortie has refused to defend himself for the kidnapping because he wants to be tried on the murder charge first. The three other defendants accused in the Laporte affair faced or will face the murder charge before standing trial on the kidnapping charge.

Lortie is being held along with the brothers Paul and Jacques Rose and Francis Simard in the kidnapping and assassination of Pierre Laporte last October.

The pale, twenty year-old former trade school student was brought into the courtroom under heavy guard and refused to stand when the judge entered. Four guards stood around the prisoners' dock and blocked Lortie from spectators' sight.

As soon as the trial commenced, Lortie waived his right to a defense. In a dialogue with the judge, barely audible to the court, Lortie asked for an adjournment in order to allow him adequate time to prepare his statement to the jury.

The judge acceded to the request and the trial was adjourned until 2 pm today.

As Lortie was escorted from the courtroom, he raised his fist and shouted, "Pouvoir au Peuple!"

Lortie is the third man to stand trial in connection with the Laporte affair. Paul Rose and Francis Simard have already been sentenced to life imprisonment for murder and Jacques Rose is awaiting trial on the same charge.

Lortie also faces a murder charge for which no trial date has been set.
